

ANTELOPE IS SAFE IN PORT

Little Schooner Arrives at Port Townsend After Having Been Given Up for Lost.

IS IN DAMAGED CONDITION

Was Fifty Eight Days Out From San Francisco for Coquille River—Other Maritime Happenings.

News reached Astoria yesterday from Port Townsend that the schooner Antelope, belonging to G. W. Hume & Co., of San Francisco, had arrived there in a badly damaged condition. The little vessel had been caught in the severe storm which raged along the coast in the latter part of January and was blown several hundred miles off her course. She managed to make Port Townsend, and it is probable she will be repaired there. The Antelope left San Francisco late in January for the Coquille river. About two weeks after her departure from the Bay city she was believed to have been sighted off the river, but the steamer reporting her was not certain as to the identity of the vessel. However, she did not reach the Coquille, and for 58 days no word was received of her. A few days ago she was again given up for lost and the owners expected never again to hear from her. However, her master, Captain Cuthrell, is an experienced man and had previously had close calls, so he managed to pull his little vessel through the storms. Doubtless the Antelope will be repaired at Townsend and then proceed south to the Coquille.

FIGHT ON THE THISTLE.

Captain England and the Steward Severely Injure Each Other.

Captain England, of the British four-masted bark Thistle, and his steward, John Lennox, became involved in an altercation Monday night at Portland that resulted in serious injury to both men. Lennox was arrested upon complaint of the captain, who charges him with assault with a dangerous weapon. The trouble came up at the evening meal, when the captain complained to the steward because his plate was not clean. The steward made a saucy reply, which, according to his statement, the captain resented by striking the steward with brass knuckles. The steward seized a handy belying pin and struck the captain a blow that put him out of business. The steward followed up the advantage thus gained, and when he finished with the master he was a sorry spectacle. Finally assistance arrived and the steward was placed under restraint. Captain England's injuries are serious, but he is getting along nicely. The steward's face is cut in several places.

Whistling Buoy Replaced.

The lighthouse tender Heather has replaced the whistling buoy at the mouth of the river. The buoy is now located half a mile south and further west than the location formerly occupied. Yesterday the Heather went out to the lightship and placed on board 27 1-2 tons of coal, returning to port during the afternoon. On Thursday the Heather will go to Grays harbor to attend to aids to navigation, but will be away only a day.

Cargo of Crude Oil.

The steamer Rosecrans arrived yesterday from San Francisco with a large cargo of crude oil for the oil burning vessels of the upper river. The Rosecrans is a medium-sized vessel and registers 1816 tons. She brought up 20,000 barrels of oil, which is consigned
